ATHANASIOS MIHADAS, Plaintiff v. STACY GIANNOPOULOS, Defendant

CHILD CUSTODY / BEST INTERESTS OF CHILD

Where all other considerations are essentially equal, best interests is determined by the advantage to the child to primarily reside in the home which will maximize time for direct interaction with a parent.

CHILD CUSTODY / GRUBER ANALYSIS

Where the court must choose the primary residence for a child who has resided 50% of the time with each parent in two different states for 4 years and a primary residence must be chosen as the child has reached school age, a mechanical Gruber analysis is not appropriate, but the court considered Gruber factors as related to a best interests analysis.

EXPERTS / WITNESS AT TRIAL

Expert witness was not permitted to testify where expert's report and CV were not provided prior to trial, despite requests made by opposing counsel.

CHILD CUSTODY / ADEQUACY OF SUBSTITUTE VISITATION

Where substitute visitation provided under Gruber analysis, no requirement that time be identical to prior arrangement, only that it foster ongoing relationship between child and non-custodial parent.

IN THE COURT OF COMMON PLEAS OF ERIE COUNTY, PENNSYLVANIA NO. 13918-2004

Appearances: John R. Evanoff, Esq., Attorney for the Plaintiff
Edward J. Niebauer, Esq., Attorney for the Defendant

OPINION

October 8, 2009: Before the Court is a dispute regarding the appropriate custodial arrangement for E.M.M., born July 20, 2004 (hereinafter "Child"). Specifically, Stacy Giannopoulos (hereinafter "mother") requested modification of an April 6, 2005 Order which granted her and Athanasios Mihadas (hereinafter "father") equal shared custody of the child on an alternating weekly schedule.

PROCEDURAL AND FACTUAL HISTORY

The parties were married on October 26, 2003. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 19. The child was born July 20, 2004. Id. at 21. Just three months later, on October 21, 2004, the parties separated. Id. at 5 and 97. Upon separation, mother moved with the child to Whitestone, New York to reside with her parents. Id. at 5.

On October 28, 2004, father filed a Custody Complaint requesting legal and physical custody of the child. In the Complaint, father alleged that it would be in the child's best interests to be in his legal and physical custody because mother wrongfully moved the child to New York, he played a substantial role in meeting the child's needs, moving the child to New York would not substantially improve the child's quality of life, realistic substitute visitation arrangements were not available and an evidentiary hearing must be conducted prior to moving the child outside of the jurisdiction. On the same date, father presented to the Honorable Michael E. Dunlavey a Petition for Emergency relief alleging that mother, on October 21, 2004, moved the child to Whitestone, New York without his knowledge or consent. Father further requested sole legal and physical custody of the child, pending a custody conference. By an October 28, 2004 Order, Judge Dunlavey awarded father sole legal and physical custody of the child, pending a custody conference.

Mother did not relinquish custody of the child to father and she failed to attend a December 20, 2004 custody conference. After the Court entered an order maintaining father as the child's sole legal and physical custodian, however, mother filed a Request for Adversarial Hearing listing relocation, primary residence, and alleged abusive conduct by father as the issues for consideration. Moreover, mother filed an Answer, New Matter and Counter-Complaint for Custody alleging that abusive circumstances by father and his family caused her to flee to New York with the child and that it would be in the child's best interests for mother to have custody in New York.

Pursuant to an agreement of the parties, Judge Dunlavey, on April 6, 2005, entered an Order requiring the parties to exchange the child on a week to week basis every Sunday at 4:00 p.m. at the State Police Barracks in Rockview, Pennsylvania, the approximate midway point between New York City, New York and Erie, Pennsylvania. See N.T. April 6, 2005. For the past four years, the parents have followed the April 6, 2005 Order. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 9.

On June 26, 2009, mother filed a Petition for Custody Modification requesting modification of the April 6, 2005 Order to accommodate the child's commencement of formal education. Specifically, mother requested that the weekly travel be eliminated and an appropriate custody schedule be entered taking into consideration the child's school schedule. This Court presided over the Custody Trial regarding this matter on July 14, 2009 and July 28, 2009.

On August 12, 2009, this Court entered its Order granting the parents shared legal and physical custody of the child, with mother receiving primary residential custody. The Order further provides that father shall receive custody of the child the second and fourth weekend of every month, the child's Thanksgiving break from school, the child's Christmas/Winter Break from school, any fall break from school and any Easter and Spring break. Furthermore, father is granted custody for the summer, with the exception that mother shall have three long weekends of custody during the summer break plus one seven day period of custody. Moreover, the Order requires each parent to permit and encourage telephone contact between the child and the non-custodial parent.

Father, on September 9, 2009, filed his Notice of Appeal.

A. Mother

Mother lives in Whitestone, New York with her parents. N.T. July 14 at 5, 16. She and the child have lived in their present residence since the parties' separation in October of 2004. Id. at 5. It is a three bedroom, two bathroom residence with two dining rooms, living rooms, play rooms, two kitchens and a back yard with a garden. Id. at 6, 26-29; see also Exhibit A Mother is forty years old. N.T. July 14 at 12. She has a Master's degree in Early Elementary School Education with a specialty in children's literature. Id. at 17. Mother obtained her teacher's certification in New York and she taught in New York from 1994 until June of 2003 when she married father and moved to Pennsylvania. Id. at 18-19.

Mother does not currently work. N.T. July 14 at 7. She receives financial support from her father who is a long-time restaurant owner who also has substantial income from real estate. Id. at 7-9 and 81. Specifically, mother's father owns one whole block in Manhattan, with an estimated worth of $30 million. Id. at 7-9 and 81. Mother's father is willing to continue to support mother and the child. Id. at 9. Nevertheless, mother plans to serve as a substitute teacher in the same school district where the child will attend school in New York, Id. at 52-53.

B. Father

Father resides in Erie, Pennsylvania in a three-bedroom three and one-half bath home. N.T. July 14 at 87 and 98. Father's parents live next door to him and his sister lives on the other side of his parents. Id. at 98 and 115-16. Father's parents, his sister, his aunt and his godmother provide childcare for father. Id. at 98 and 119-20.

Father has a B.S. in accounting. Id. at 97. He is the owner of a Meineke Car Care Center. Id. at 100. His hours are from 8:00 a.m. to 6:00 p.m. Monday through Saturday. Id. at 118.

C. The Child

In New York, the child has her own bedroom and a playroom. N.T. July 14 at 6, 26 and 79; see also Exhibit A. The child and mother have meals with mother's parents in the home. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 40.

While in her mother's custody, the child attends Broadway shows, the circus, playgrounds, Central Park, and church services with mother and her extended family. Id. at 6-7, 41-42. Mother and the child also do a daily activity together, which might include going to the library, baking or watching a movie. Id. at 40. In addition to mother and her maternal grandparents, the child has a great-grandmother, aunts, uncles and cousins in New York. Id. at 61. The child regularly engages in activities with this extended family, as well as with other children her age. Id. at 61-62, 78.

In New York, the child attended pre-school five days per week from 8:30 until 1:30. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 13 and 25. Mother enrolled the child in the pre-school program when she was three years old. Id. at 22. Mother maintained daily contact with the child's teachers. Id. at 25. Moreover, mother works with the child to teach her how to read, write and learn her numbers. Id. at 11 and 76-78.

The child has experienced some developmental delays. Id. at 33-34; see also Exhibits D-O. Accordingly, prior to her enrollment in pre-school, the child received Early Intervention services. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 22-23, 35; see also Exhibits D-F. Some portions of the therapy provided through Early Intervention continued through the child's pre-school in New York. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 23-25, 35; see also Exhibits G-O. The Early Intervention services offered to the child in Erie, however, discontinued in September of 2006. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 104.

The child cries when she goes to custodial exchanges from mother to father. Id. at 10, 58, 75 and 84. Mother, however, encourages the child to spend time with her father. Id. at 10, 58, 75 and 84.

The child has a doctor and dentist in New York. Id. at 36-38. The child also has a doctor in Pennsylvania. Id. at 96. Each parent maintains medical coverage for the child. Id. at 58 and 97.

In Erie, the child has her own bedroom. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 98. Sometimes, however, she sleeps at her paternal grandparents' house or at her aunt's house. Id. at 116-17. In Erie, the child is involved in preschool, toddler aerobics, swimming, soccer, basketball and ballet. Id. at 89-91, 99 and 111-112; see also Exhibit P-1. Moreover, she is enrolled in a reading program at Tracy Elementary School. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 94 and 99. The child's preschool was Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 9:30 until 2:30, with extracurricular classes on Tuesday and Thursday from 9:30 until 2:30. Id. at 119.

The school proposed for the child's attendance in New York is PS-79 in Whitestone, New York. Id. at 30-31; see also Exhibit R. The school is within walking distance of mother's home and mother and her father will transport the child to and from school. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 32. The school proposed for the child in Erie is Villa Elementary School. Id. at 96.

DISCUSSION

The paramount concern of the Court in a child custody case is the best interests of the child. Collins v. Collins, 897 A.2d 466, 471 (Pa. Super. 2006). In determining what is in the child's best interests, the Court must assess, on a case-by-case basis, all factors that may legitimately affect the child's physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual well-being. Id. When a custody case involves relocation, the best interests analysis must include: (1) assessment of the potential advantages of the proposed move and whether the move is likely to significantly improve the quality of life for the parent and the child; (2) assurance that the move is not motivated simply by a desire to frustrate the visitation rights of the noncustodial parent or to impede the development of a meaningful parent/ child relationship; and (3) consideration of the feasibility of substitute visitation arrangements to insure a continued relationship between the child and the non-custodial parent. Gruber v. Gruber, 400 Pa. Super. 174, 583 A.2d 434, 439 (1990). When a court reviews a request for change of custody and relocation in the context of an equal shared custody arrangement, there are two primary family units and, therefore, the Gruber factors must be analyzed in the context of two competing custodial environments. McAlister v. McAlister, 747 A.2d 390, 392 (Pa. Super. 2000) citing Thomas v. Thomas, 739 A.2d 206, 210-11 (Pa. Super. 1999)(en banc). The Gruber factors are but one aspect of the overall best interests analysis when the court is formulating a primary physical custody order involving relocation of the child. Klos v. Klos, 934 A.2d 724, 729 (Pa. Super. 2007); see also Clapper v. Harvey, 716 A.2d 1271 (Pa. Super. 1998).

As discussed in Section IIA below, this case is not a traditional Gruber case. Nevertheless, to some extent, the Gruber factors were relevant to this fact scenario. Accordingly, this Court, to the extent relevant to the child's physical, intellectual, moral and spiritual well-being, considered the Gruber factors as part of its best interests analysis.

I. BEST INTERESTS OF THE CHILD

First, it is clear that both parties are capable and loving parents.

Both parents ensure the child's physical well-being. Whether in mother's custody or father's custody, the child has adequate physical living arrangements, neither with an obvious benefit over the other. Moreover, each residence either includes a support network of extended family, or is directly next door to extended family. Furthermore, each parent ensures the child's physical care through maintaining healthcare coverage in his/her home state and through providing medical care.

In addition, each parent looks out for the child's intellectual needs. For example, when the child displayed some developmental delays, each parent obtained early intervention services for the child in his or her home town. Furthermore, each parent pursued pre-school education for the child during the time that the child was in his/her custody.

¹ It is noteworthy that, at one point, a lack of communication between the parties resulted in the child receiving duplicate shots. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 36-37. It is completely inappropriate and unacceptable that such an incident occurred. Nevertheless, the testimony of both parties indicates that the parties now understand the harm of their juvenile behavior and the Court believes that communication is improving between the parties and that they can work together for the best interests of this child. Id. at 54-56, 63-64, 70-71, 102. Father attempted to demonstrate that the lack of communication was one-sided. The Court notes, however, that father, like mother, failed to provide relevant information regarding the child's care and activities while in his custody. Id. 55, 69, 72 and 110-112.

Moreover, it is clear that mother has been personally involved in the child's education, staying in daily contact with the child's teachers and working with the child to teach her to read, write, and learn her numbers. Similarly, father works with the child on her reading and he enrolled her in an extracurricular reading class. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 94-95.

Furthermore, the experts² agree that both parents are capable and loving parents and that the child responds to and shows love toward both parents. For example, Dr. Victor Masone indicated in his report as follows:

During the observations of E.M. with her parents, E.M. tended to respond to requests equally. She tended to be emotionally attached to both, showed affection to both and had no difficulty interacting with both parents. It is obvious that both parents made attempts to direct her play and to give her appropriate prompts when needed. Neither parent seemed to be overly demanding or harsh with E.M. during the course of the evaluation.

Psychological (Custody) Evaluation, Victor Masone, Ph.D., at 12. Dr. Masone further provided:

there does not appear to be any significant information that would suggest either one of the parents would be unfit to parent this child. Both of these people have been parenting her since 2005 and providing her with the interventions and services and activities that she will need to develop appropriately.

A review of the mental health assessments of both parents indicate that neither parent appears to be better equipped emotionally to handle E.M.'s educational needs and emotional needs than the other. Both parents have very strong and supportive families that provide support, physical as well as mentally. Strong family systems are present in which E.M. could thrive.

Impressions of E.M.'s perception of her relationship with her parents was evaluated (at her ability and maturity level). She seems to have an attachment to both. She reports loving both parents and liking to be with and visit both parents.

Psychological (Custody) Evaluation, Victor Masone, Ph.D., at 15-16. Similarly, Dr. Marcus noted: "[t]rying to discern what is in [the Child's] best interests is extremely difficult for she loves both of her adequate and doting hands-on parents, as they do her." Report of Paul Marcus, Ph.D. at p. 2. Furthermore, Dr. Marcus observed that "both [father] and [mother] were attentive, responsive and affectionate with [the child] and capable of setting reasonable limits with her. There was nothing to criticize in terms of their hands-on parenting skills..." See report of Paul Marcus, Ph.D. at p. 8. Along with the expert reports, it is clear from witness testimony and photographs that, despite some hesitation on custodial exchange days, the child is happy and well cared for in each parent's home.

Accordingly, it is clear that each environment available to this child is loving, appropriate, positive and truly structured in favor of the child's best interests. As the child's educational needs require a primary residence, however, the question arises as to which of these seemingly equal and positive environments provides advantages to the child which will serve her best interests.

With regard to father's home, an apparent advantage is that father, unlike mother, has financial independence. Nevertheless, the home that mother provides for the child in New York is financially stable. Specifically, it is clear that mother's parents have the desire and the ability to support both mother and the child, a position to which they have demonstrated a commitment for more than four years. Furthermore, mother has the education and desire necessary to resume her career now that the child is school age. In that respect, the Court believes that it is likely that mother will gain financial independence, despite a lack of any indication that she will need it. Regardless, due to the unwavering support of mother's parents, a lack of financial independence does not equate to instability in this case.

With regard to mother's home, the child has available an optimum amount of first-hand parental care. Specifically, mother is not currently employed, so her focus is exclusively on the child and the child's needs. Moreover, as mother returns to work, she will be on precisely the same work schedule as the child's school schedule.

Father, on the other hand, works six days per week from 8:00 a.m. until 6:00 p.m. as the owner of a car care center. He attempted to lead this Court to believe that being the owner of the company allows him the flexibility to be very involved with the child, including actively participating in many activities with her. The unrebutted testimony of Gregory Heintz, a private investigator hired by mother, clearly indicates, however, that the use of Father's flexible schedule is merely to leave work in order to chauffer the child to and from her multiple activities. N.T. July 28 at 9-20. When father drops the child off at one of her activities, he does not stay and engage in the activity with the child, or even observe her participation.³ Id. Instead, he leaves her in the care of a third party and then he returns to work. Id. When the child's activities end, father returns to pick the child up and delivers her to the care of one of his relatives for several hours while he returns to work. Id. These exchanges take merely a matter of minutes; father does not stay and spend time with the child. Id. In this respect, it is clear that the child spends the majority of her waking hours engaged in an activity with someone other than father.

While there is absolutely no indication that the time that the child spends with her paternal relatives or learning skills in a structured activity is negative, the fact remains that when the child is in mother's custody, mother, unlike father, is personally available to the child at all times in which the child is in her care. Mother has never had to use a daycare provider or babysitter for the child when the child has been in her custody. N.T. July 14 at 40. Instead, she utilizes her custodial time to personally participate in activities with the child and to be personally involved in the child's education. When the child is not in school, mother and the child engage in constructive activities together. They bake, go to the library, work on reading and writing skills, go on play dates, prepare things for show and tell and simply spend time together. Id. at 40, 61-62, 76-78. As Athena Giannopoulous, the child's maternal grandmother, testified with regard to the child's love of playing school with mother, "you should see it, I admire both of them, it's funny sometimes. But, you should see them, you think you're watching teacher and a student." Id. at 76. As Ms. Giannopoulous' testimony demonstrates, this child benefits from the time that she has to actually engage in activities with mother.

Considering that the child must endure a significant transition in her custody arrangement, but that each household available to the child is a positive environment, the Court sees it as an advantage to the child to be in the home that will maximize the time that she has for direct interaction with a parent. In this respect, the Court agrees with Dr. Marcus that, given the essentially equal living environments, this advantage to the child is controlling. See report of Paul Marcus, Ph.D. at pp. 17-18. Mother, unlike father, is completely available to the child to provide maximum parental contact and care.

Moreover, with regard to a comparison of the educational opportunities available to the child in Pennsylvania versus New York, there is no indication that one environment is better for the child than the other. See Psychological (Custody) Evaluation of Dr. Masone at p. 15; see also report of Dr. Marcus at p. 17. Nevertheless, it is noteworthy that mother has a degree in Early Elementary School Education. Mother's background, combined with her hands-on parenting and personal availability to the child, has the potential to benefit this child - who has experienced some developmental delays - as she begins her early elementary school education. It is apparent that mother takes advantage of her time with the child to personally teach her things important for her education. In addition to helping her with reading, writing and numbers, mother also incorporates education into the child's play in a manner that the child enjoys. N.T. July 14, 2009 at 76-77. While father's testimony indicates that he also works with the child on learning to read and he even enrolled her in an extracurricular reading class, mother is much more active in the child's education. For example, mother maintained daily contact with the child's teachers and she personally engages the child in educational activities like taking her to the library and mimicking a school setting at home. Mother's background, approach and availability appear to be a unique educational opportunity and benefit for the child.

Despite the advantages that mother offers to the child, the Court is compelled to address the concern raised by Dr. Masone that mother's removal of the child from Pennsylvania and her refusal to stop using a doctor that father objects to indicate that mother has a propensity to alienate the child from father. See Psychological (Custody) Evaluation, Victor Masone, Ph.D., ¶5 at 16. While mother may not have made the best choices, the Court does not believe that her motive in seeking primary custody of the child is questionable. First, witness testimony clearly indicates that mother encourages the child to attend visits with father, even when the child cries. N.T. July 14 at 10, 58, 75 and 84. Moreover, in her testimony, mother acknowledged that the child loves her father and that he loves her. Furthermore, both of the experts in this case clearly indicate that the child has a loving relationship with both parents, she likes visiting both parents and she has an attachment to both. It is highly unlikely that the child would have such a positive relationship with her father if mother were truly trying to impede the child's relationship with him. Considering the wonderful relationship that the child has with each parent, as well as the parties' strict adherence to an equal shared custody arrangement for four years, the Court believes that neither mother nor father seek primary custody of the child in an attempt to frustrate the other's visitation rights or to impede the parent/child relationship. This child has simply reached school age and it is obvious that she cannot shift between two different schools in separate states on a weekly basis.

With regard to the feasibility of substitute visitation arrangements to insure a continued relationship between the child and the non-custodial parent, it is clear that alternate arrangements are available in this case. Specifically, each parent has, without any apparent difficulty, been able to exercise shared custody of the child, despite the distance, for more than four years. The child's school schedule mandates that the custodial arrangement will be different from that to which the parties and the child have become accustomed. Nevertheless, the Court established a schedule with the intent to maximize the non-custodial parent's time, without jeopardizing the child's educational needs.

In sum, both of these parents are good parents with equally wonderful relationships with the child. Obviously, neither distance nor either party is an impediment to this child's relationship with the other parent. Moreover, both parents can be faulted for the lack of communication which has, at times, worked to the child's detriment. Nevertheless, there is no indication that either parent wishes to impede the other parent's custodial time with the child. In that respect, it was difficult to determine whether it would be in the best interests of the child to be in mother's primary custody or whether it would be in her best interests to be in father's primary custody. For the aforementioned reasons, the Court selected mother as the child's primary custodian.

II. STATEMENT OF MATTERS

In his Concise Statement of Matters Complained of on Appeal, father alleges that this court erred when it failed to apply Gruber, failed to take testimony from Dr. Doris Gernovich, failed to "maximize the time the child spends with the parents based upon the parties schedules," and its findings were against the weight of the evidence.

A. Gruber

With regard to Gruber, this Court considered the Gruber factors as part of its overall best interests analysis. Nevertheless, as this case presents the unusual scenario of an equal shared custody arrangement occurring for four years while the parties live nearly ten hours apart, this was not the typical Gruber case. As recently stated by the Superior Court in a case wherein the parent requesting primary custody of the child was already established in the relocation state:

...[t]he use of the term "relocation" in this case, as understood in the traditional Gruber case, is somewhat incorrect, in that, only the minor children would be "relocating" to Florida because Father is already a Florida resident. Therefore, in reality, the primary focus for the trial court, and, by extension, this Court, was to determine whether the living situation for the minor children at either Mother's home or Father's home in Florida serves the minor children's best interests, i.e., whether Mother or Father should be granted primary physical custody of the minor children. Consequently, the trial court's examination of the factors enunciated in Gruber constituted only a small component of that broad analysis. As such, we will not, as Mother would have us, perform a mechanical analysis of the Gruber factors, but we will instead incorporate our analysis of these issues into the broader question of whether the trial court's custody award was in the best interests of the minor children.

See Klos v. Klos, 934 A.2d 724, 729 (Pa. Super. 2007)(citations omitted). Even more unusual in this case, is the fact that even the child is established in the "relocation" state as she has lived in New York on an equal basis as her time spent in Pennsylvania. In that respect, there is a degree of difficulty in trying to force this fact scenario into the traditional Gruber analysis. For example, it is difficult to consider whether relocating the child to New York is likely to significantly improve the quality of life for mother and the child when, in fact, Mother and the child already have a quality life firmly established in New York. On the other hand, it is possible to consider the potential advantages of the child living primarily in New York as opposed to her living primarily in Pennsylvania, which this Court analyzed as discussed above. Accordingly, with the ultimate goal of serving the best interests of the child, this Court applied the Gruber factors as relevant. In that respect, father's first assignment of error is without merit

B. Testimony of Dr. Gernovich

Father further alleges that this Court erred by precluding the testimony of Dr. Gernovich.

On June 30, 2009, father filed an Initial Pre-Trial Narrative Statement that listed Dr. Doris Gernovich as an expert. No other information regarding Dr. Gernovich or her anticipated testimony was provided. Accordingly, at trial, mother's counsel asked for an offer of proof with regard to Dr. Gernovich. N.T. July 28, 2009 at 37. In response, father's counsel indicated that Dr. Gernovich was being called to have her qualified as an expert in the field of elementary school education. N.T. July 28, 2009 at 37-38. Counsel further indicated that Dr. Gernovich did a comparison of Villa Maria Elementary, the school that the child would attend in Erie, with PS 79, the school that the child would attend in New York. N.T. July 28, 2009 at 37-38. In response, mother's counsel indicated "I don't even have a curriculum vitae as to her qualifications. I have no report. I've asked for the report and was given the answer that she does not prepare reports, and hasn't in the past." N.T. July 28, 2009 at 38. The record further reflects that, on July 8, 2009, mother filed a Notice of Serving Interrogatories and Request for Production of Documents on father's counsel.4

Considering that mother's counsel was, without reasonable explanation, denied additional information regarding Dr. Gernovich's anticipated testimony, despite requesting it, this Court precluded Dr. Gernovich's testimony. See Pa.R.C.P. 4003.5; see also Klyman v. Southeastern Pennsylvania Transp. Authority, 480 A.2d 299 (Pa. Super. 1984). Without information regarding the facts and opinions to which the expert was expected to testify, as well as the basis for those opinions, mother had not even the most basic information upon which to prepare a meaningful response to the testimony presented at trial. In that respect, mother clearly would have been prejudiced by the testimony.

Accordingly, father's second assignment of error is without merit.

C. Maximizing the Child's Time with her Parents

Father further alleges that this Court failed to maximize the time the child spends with the parents based upon the parties' schedules.

After four and one-half years of equal shared custody, it is difficult to formulate an arrangement that seems fair to either party. The law, however, requires only that realistic substitute visitation arrangements exist to foster an ongoing relationship between the child and the non-custodial parent; not that the schedule available is identical to the custodial arrangement currently in place. See Billhime v. Billhime, 869 A.2d 1031, 1039-40 (Pa. Super. 2005).

As discussed above, the Court considered the parties' schedules and selected mother as the child's primary custodian for the specific reason of maximizing the amount of time that the child has with a parent. The schedule provided for father's custodial time was an attempt to give the child as much time as possible with her father, considering that she is now school age. The Court fails to see how a schedule, which ensures that the child is with a parent at all times while in the care of her primary custodian and grants the non-custodial parent greater time than father proposed for the non-custodial parent's custody, fails to maximize the time that the child spends with her parents. N.T July 14 at 102-103. This is particularly puzzling to the Court when father testified that he has a flexible work schedule because he owns his own business. N.T. July 14 at 104.

For the foregoing reasons, father's third allegation of error is without merit.

D. Weight of the Evidence

For the reasons discussed above, this Court's August 12, 2009 Order was not against the weight of the evidence. Accordingly, father's final allegation of error is without merit.
