LEARNING THE HARD LESSONS

By John M. Cleland

The over 100 ECBA members who attended this year's Mid-Year Membership Meeting on June 16th had the pleasure of hearing from The Honorable John M. Cleland of McKean County on a very unpleasant topic: the "Kids for Cash" scandal. The scandal broke in 2008. It involved two Luzerne County judges who orchestrated a scheme in which they were paid millions of dollars for the development of a privately owned juvenile facility to which one of the judges sent hundreds of children.

During his presentation, Judge Cleland mentioned an article he wrote for the Pennsylvania Lawyer in 2010. With permission from both Judge Cleland and PBA, that article is reprinted below.

Members of the Interbranch Commission on Juvenile Justice have frequently been asked whether what happened in Luzerne County could happen somewhere else — or perhaps is happening somewhere else. We've said we didn't know, but we didn't think so, but only based on scuttlebutt, insider talk and a lack of rumors.

But is it happening anywhere else? Really, we don't know. Why is it we can't say with confidence that our system of law and justice is honest and efficient? That's a pretty basic question, after all. We should be able to answer it.

I've been struggling with that question.

We heard it said that what happened in Luzerne County was so far beyond anyone's experience that no one could have foreseen it.

Let's think about that statement for a minute, because it's built on the kind of seductive sophistry that carries with it dangerous self-deception. It forestalls more thoughtful analysis. It's the kind of superficial explanation that allows us to minimize and excuse and explain away.

I think we can agree it's certainly true that the fact that a judge would conspire with the developer of a detention center and receive millions of dollars in return is something that probably could not have been foreseen.

But take a step back and you can readily see what should have been foreseen:

- The possibility that judges would fix cases.
- The possibility that a court system could be infected with politics and patronage.
- The possibility that there could be manipulation of case assignments to particular judges.
- The possibility that a judge could routinely ignore the procedural rules and applicable law.
- The possibility that ill-defined powers of president judges could be abused.
- The possibility that hiring practices could enable someone in power to be insulated from scrutiny.
- The possibility that a culture could exist that discourages reporting wrongdoing and rewards silence and accommodation.

These are precisely the kinds of systemic dangers that not only should have been foreseen but also should have been anticipated — and controls should have been in place to catch them. They were not foreseen and the controls were not in place to catch them in Luzerne County, and perhaps, in one degree or another, they are not in place anywhere else in Pennsylvania.

The reason we should be paying attention to these issues, to possibilities like these, is that they are the kinds of things that undermine the integrity of our justice system; and if the public does not have faith in the integrity of the justice system, then that lack of public confidence undermines the rule of law.

The experience of Luzerne County has taught us a very tough lesson: Those who work in the justice system move in the direction of what they believe is expected of them. We rely on the leaders of the justice system to set those expectations, to tell us what their expectations are and to assure that those expectations are being met. The unmistakable fact is that the justice system, like all systems, reflects the values of those who lead the system. This is true on a county level. It is also true on a statewide level.

Leadership creates expectations. And expectations create culture. And culture fosters behavior that can be either admirable or criminal.

If leaders value political power and money and patronage and the ability to use the system to give advantages to one's friends, you get one kind of justice system.

If, on the other hand, leaders value openness and transparency and a devotion to the rule of law and a sense of duty to protect civic virtue, then you get an entirely different kind of justice system.

If we have a system in which lawyers do not know they have a duty to report an incompetent or corrupt judge — or if they know they have a duty but do not know how to do it — that is not a justice system that inspires confidence.

If we have a system in which a judge, regardless of his or her motivation, can ignore the law and the rules of procedure with impunity, case after case, year after year, that is not a justice system that inspires confidence in its fairness.

If we have a system in which hiring and patronage practices permit family, close friends and political associates to be placed in positions to protect judges and powerful administrators, that is not a justice system that inspires public trust.

If we have a system that has no meaningful performance standards, that is not a justice system we can say with assurance is efficient.

If a system can essentially be in collapse and no one notices, then can we say with confidence that we even have a justice system?

These are the hard lessons of Luzerne County.

And the hardest, and cruelest, lesson is this: Given the structural and administrative limitations of our present justice system, to conclude with absolute assurance that what happened in Luzerne County could not happen anywhere else in Pennsylvania is not much more than wishful thinking.

The commission's report concludes that it is by reaffirming our commitment to the cause of justice and by encouraging others to improve and reform our legal system that we can redeem ourselves in some small way for the myriad failings that undermined the rule of law. This is the opportunity Luzerne County presents to us. All Pennsylvania attorneys and judges should, and I hope will, commit themselves to that effort.

Endnote

State Superior Court Senior Judge John M. Cleland was chair of the Interbranch Commission on Juvenile Justice (ICJJ). His commentary is based on remarks he presented to the Commission for Justice Initiatives in Pennsylvania on July 21, 2010, and expresses the consensus view of the members of the ICJJ. Views expressed in The Pennsylvania Lawyer do not necessarily reflect the official views or policies of the Pennsylvania Bar Association.
