Lawyer is suspended for texting witness during phone deposition; how did opposing counsel find out? - A Florida lawyer has been suspended for 91 days for texting advice to a witness during a phone deposition and then failing to come clean when questioned by the opposing counsel and a judge. The Florida Supreme Court suspended lawyer Derek Vashon James of Maitland, Florida, in a Nov. 18 decision. How creepy is that new product? Mozilla's *privacy not included privacy guide will tell you - It's that time of year again when we start to think about holiday gifts and Black Friday shopping. So as any good privacy pro knows, the Mozilla *privacy not included guide is the place to go to learn about the "creepiness" of the latest toy or gift that you are looking to buy. This year, the guide reviews 151 products from smart toys to exercise equipment and provides lots of information related to the privacy features of each product. The purpose of the guide is to share information regarding the privacy and data collection practices for the smart products. Clicking on a particular product reviewed on the website will provide a summary of the product's data collection and privacy policies and the guide's rating for the product. Users also are able to vote and rate products along a "creepiness" scale, ranging from "not creepy" to "super creepy." For second time, ABA Legal Education Section seeks public comment on diversity accreditation standard - Following criticism on proposed changes to a law school diversity standard, additional suggested revisions — and clarifications — will be sent out for notice and comment. The action was approved Friday by the council of the ABA Section of Legal Education and Admissions to the Bar, which met in San Francisco. "Based on the notice and comment process, we went back to the drawing board. All in all, it will make for a better product," said Leo Martinez, a University of California Hastings College of the Law professor emeritus who chairs the council.
